The walls of this brick and concrete-block building sit on a concrete-slab foundation. Formstone accents the lower section of a façade that is otherwise dominated by the large, plate-glass commercial windows and a recessed, metal-and-glass door. The roof is flat and without embellishment. The building lacks architectural distinction. It is, however, approximately 50 years of age and typical of commercial architecture of that period. Its massing and scale are relatively consistent with Main Street's traditional character and for these reasons is considered to be a contributing resource.
